Additional superannuation contributions

AccountRight Plus and Premier, Australia only

Additional super contributions can be:

- a business expense paid by the employer in addition to gross pay, on top of the 9.5% super guarantee contributions, such as employer additional, productivity or redundancy super contributions
- a deduction from an employee’s net pay, such as employee additional or spouse super contributions
- a deduction from an employee’s gross pay, such as salary sacrifice superannuation.

Contributions above the compulsory 9.5% superannuation guarantee may be reportable on employee payment summaries. To clarify if a contribution is reportable, check the ATO’s guidelines.

We’ll step you through how to set up employer additional and employee additional super contributions by modifying the default superannuation categories in AccountRight. If required you can create new superannuation categories to suit your needs.

The same approach can be used for other super contribution types, such as productivity, redundancy and spouse, but you might need help from your accounting advisor regarding their suitability and tax implications.

| To set up employer additional super |
| To set up employee additional super |

FAQs

I’ve set up a set amount of additional super per pay - why is it showing zero on the pay?

How do I pay a one-off additional super contribution?

Related topics

- Superannuation
- Set up superannuation funds
- Set up Pay Super
- Set up salary sacrifice superannuation
- Make superannuation payments
- Enter employee payroll information

From the community

- Re: how to change so salary sacrifice does not get allocated to wages in Profit & loss
- Re: Super Calculations on MYOB AR Live Plus 2019.3
- Re: NO SUPPORT FROM MYOB
- Re: Pay Slip information different to software
- Re: Super payments ONLY from original Bank account - should not be able to change the Bank account

More »